Ron Ordway, Chairman and CEO of Video Display Corporation, comments, "As we have, for 31 years since our inception in 1975, Video Display remains committed to providing CRT technology solutions to our customers across many marketplaces, and this is especially true for the simulation and training marketplaces. For the many thousands of installed devices in the field as well as the new projectors currently being installed, the need for continual support is a critical necessity. To solidify this support, we announced an agreement with Sony Corporation of Japan to continue manufacturing of Sony CRT projection devices in 2005. We also continue to manufacture the Supralux CRT for Thales Training and Simulation and other training applications. Likewise, Video Display remains as the exclusive manufacturer of Charactron Radar tubes for Japanese Naval Radar and other uses. VDC now manufactures and offers the high resolution Panasonic CRTs for projection systems produced within VDC as well as all other manufacturers. And now with the announcement of VDC Display Systems Marquee 8500 HR projection system, we are showing once again that the CRT device not only remains as the best answer for the most discriminating users, it continues to offer a unique set capability not present through the use of many non-CRT technologies."

"The new four million resolvable pixel Marquee Ultra 8500HR display development announced November 15, 2006 adds to the extensive projection system product line VDC Display Systems has been producing for many years now," continues David Mutchler, President of VDC Display Systems. "The Marquee projection line of today is an extension of the core Electrohome product line acquired from Christie Digital in 2002, since which VDC Display Systems has produced more than 1000 projection systems. We also continue to receive orders for the Marquee Calligraphic Projector, the core of which we purchased from Evans and Sutherland to serve the commercial and military simulation and training marketplace for FAA Level D or equivalent training requirements."
